

NK International USA

Designer-ready content skeleton for wireframes, Figma planning, and site hierarchy.

Brief Purpose

This document reorganizes NK International USA's existing website content into a cleaner, more strategic page structure. The goal is to give designers a practical content skeleton for modern wireframes while reducing navigation clutter and strengthening buyer confidence.

01 CURRENT WEBSITE READOUT

The current website contains valuable information, but the navigation is scattered across too many pages, making it hard for buyers to find the content they need. Important proof points such as NK's 22+ years of service, custom clothing specializations (uniforms, streetwear/trendy fashion, merchant apparel, private label), and end-to-end manufacturing process are buried across multiple pages. Testimonials and differentiators are also separated from the story. The current site also includes a Track Order function; however, this should be intentionally removed from the redesign. The new website should function as a strict informational and lead-generation website rather than an order-status portal. The redesign should preserve the strong content while reorganizing it around buyer confidence, operational clarity, and clear inquiry paths.

02 RECOMMENDED SITEMAP

Adopt a compact navigation model with five core pages. This structure keeps the website focused on information, credibility, capabilities, portfolio proof, and inquiry conversion. Support-style functionality such as Track Order should be removed from the main experience so the redesign remains a clean informational site. The optional blog/resources page can be added later without crowding the main menu.

Page	Purpose	Menu Role
Home	Introduces NK International, previews differentiators, capabilities, products, and funnels visitors toward quote requests.	Core sales page

04 COMPETITOR BENCHMARKING

A review of reputable B2B apparel manufacturing websites shows how strong brands structure credibility, capabilities, and conversion paths. The insights below focus on navigation patterns, messaging, and design elements that can inspire NK's redesign.

Competitor	What They Do Well	Design Takeaway for NK
Bomme Studio	Clear top-level separation between services, products, education, and contact. Positions private label, premium merch, full-package production, and CMT as dedicated service paths. Strong manufacturing capabilities section: product development, pattern making, sampling, cutting/sewing, QC, and bulk production management.	NK should keep navigation compact while still separating capabilities and product proof. Use strong product imagery, succinct copy, and a persistent CTA.
Stylus Apparel	Groups production services under a single Services menu and uses the tagline "Design Decorate Develop Distribute" to communicate full-service apparel production. Speaks to both start-ups and established brands.	NK can use concise, sequence-based language to show the full production journey without overloading the nav.
USA Clothing Manufacturers	Keeps main navigation simple while using collections/services pages to house many categories. Strong sustainability story and visible quality-control stages. Benefits list highlights confidentiality, low MOQs, catalog size, and discounts.	NK should integrate sustainability and quality-control proof directly into core pages rather than leaving them buried.

05 DESIGNER GUIDANCE

- Use high-resolution product and process photography. Avoid generic textile stock images when authentic NK visuals are available.
- Keep CTAs consistent across pages: "Request a Quote," "Start Your Project," and "Book a Consultation."
- Present dense operational content as cards, timelines, comparison blocks, or short case studies to aid scanning.
- Keep the website strictly informational: focus on quote requests, capabilities, portfolio proof, company credibility, and contact details; remove Track Order and order-status functionality.
- Lead with trust proofs: 22+ years in business, 100+ customers, success rate, zero mark-up logistics, global offices, quality control, and sustainability certifications.
- Simplify navigation: limit top-level pages, use dropdowns only where necessary, and group related content together.

06 FINAL NOTES

Strategic Direction

NK International possesses strong capabilities, a long operating history, and deep service expertise. A successful redesign should not simply beautify the site; it must strategically reorganize the content around buyer confidence, operational transparency, and clear conversion paths. The simplified sitemap reduces friction by condensing overlapping pages and aligning the navigation with proven industry patterns from competitors. By highlighting differentiators early, showcasing products and processes clearly, and offering easy contact pathways, the new site will better serve prospective and existing clients.
